

Journal of Sport for Development (JSFD) CALL FOR PAPERS

Special Issue on Sport and Livelihoods

 The submission deadline has been extended to November 15, 2019 *****

This special issue seeks to bring together empirical and conceptual work on the area of sport and livelihoods within the sport for development field. For this special issue, all papers that discuss, explore, and/or expand knowledge about the relationship between sport and livelihoods in various local, national, and international contexts are welcome. Papers from different disciplines, perspectives and global regions are invited, including scholar-practitioner contributions.

Research topics and themes may include but are not limited to:

- Intended and unintended consequences of SFD programs focused on economic development
- The role of sport in offering opportunities for employment, vocational training, and job skills training
- Contextual, political, social, and cultural relations and influences on SFD and livelihood programs
- Critical or sociopolitical perspectives and evaluations of SFD and livelihoods
- Management processes and practical strategies for implementing SFD focused on livelihoods in the Global South and Global North
- Theoretical perspectives and methodological approaches to the study of sport and livelihoods
- Explorations on the gendered and intersectional dynamics and relations of economic development through SFD
- SFD and social entrepreneurship, social enterprises, and other forms of entrepreneurship
- Quantitative, qualitative and mixed methods for the study of sport and employability
